The Letters of Franklin K. Lane

Souls in the Next World-The

This is the last of the series of letters and diaries of Franklin K Joseph Gallo and his wife Anna Lane published by The New York Herald. The first portion of the closing ived a peaceful life for eighteen years installment is Mr. Lane's vivid description of his sensations before and a the little farming town of Pairfax, after a surgical operation which failed. The latter fragment, found is S. D. Last Monday they came to Mr. Lane's room, was written by him the day before he died. It remains New York to take ship to Europe and unfinished.

FIFTEENTH AND LAST INSTALLMENT

(Copyright 1922 by Anne W. Lanc.) Last Friday, you see, about 10 in the morning, I took the step that Alcazar Hotel in West Thirty-second I should have taken months, yes, years, ago. I was stretched on a stiff, street, and the police, the Slavonic hard table, my arms were clamped down and in three-quarters of ar hour I had my appendix and my gall bladder removed. To-day, most has been lost in the subway since she tentatively, I crawled on to a chair and ate my first mouthful of solid and her husband started out to visit food. But four days ago I managed to shave myself, and I am regarded omething vaguely identified as Mr. as pretty spry. Broadway.

Gallo told his story last night, using up all his English words in two minutes. He and his wife on the Dakota farm spoke their native language and considered America a foreign country; then decided to take their American dollars and go back home. They went to Chicago, where someone gave them a letter to the Cunard offices in New York.

They arrived here last Monday at a o'clock in the morning, filled with the idea that they had to see Mr. Broadway to get their tickets, the Cunard offices being at 25 Broadway. With the aid of the Providence that watches over children and people who spend eighteen years in a country without learning its language they reached 25 Broadway—and found it closed. When they asked a man where Mr. Bro For two days I had had knowledge that this operation was to take way. So they went into what Gallo spirit was to go back into the great Ocean of Spirits, my one duty was to conform. "Lead, Kindly Light," was all the gospel I had. I accepted. Gallo said that they rode back and forth for four hours until a guard put them off. They discovered they only had three of their four handbags, so Mrs. Gallo went back into the train to get the other one. The train started set the other one. The train started

Mrs. Gallo went back into the train to get the other one. The train started and she was gone. Gallo thought Mr. Broadway or somebody was kidnaping his wife, so he dropped his three handbags, jumped onto the tracks and chased the train for more than an hour. He did not catch it, although several others almost caught him. He was dressed in a cap and overalls, and everybody who was him thought he was a track walker. "Lift me up, lift me up."

DETROIT, Nov. 15.—Leland H. Garrison of this city, who committed suicide in New York Tuesday, was 28 years old. He had made a fruitless quest for the love of one of the reigning film stars, a childhood playmate. He was the son of wealthy Newton, Jowa, parents.

Once before Garrison had attempted to kill himself. Last Easter Sunday he turned on all five gas burners on a kitchen range in the house where he roomed, after closing the windows and doers and drinking a quantity of ether. He was found and rescued, after being rushed to a hospital.

Garrison was a moody, dreamy man, deeply in love with the film actress who sent him many letters. He was reticent regarding his past life.

Representative Lempert (Wis.), follower of La Follette, said that with a definite program and with the insurgents united there would be a chance of getting somewhere.

"The House should be reorganized," he said, "so as to give the West more recognition on the important committees. The entire West is seething with insurgency and one can understand it when he considers that west of the Missouri-Missispip River the Republicans were thoroughly beaten, which meant that the people do not approve of the Harding policies.

Membership Campaign

The Merchants' Association, which is now celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary, has thoroughly demonstrated its willingness and ability to serve the interests of all lines of business - commerce and industry-in New York City. So many attacks are being made upon New York from the outside; so many bloc attacks are being made upon those things which are of particular interest and value to the business men of New York City, that a thoroughly efficient and active organization is required.

The Merchants' Association, working under high pressure, finds that it needs better support in man power and in financial resources. For that reason 500 of its loyal members, leaders in the commercial, financial and professional life of New York, are going out into the city four mornings this week to carry an invitation to membership to those who should re-
